Sir William left Constantinople a few days ago, and while journeying homeward passed through Sofia. He remained there a short time and had a brief interview with M. It was reported at that time that Sir William set forth at length the views of Lord Salisbury that the Bulgarian governmentshould go far towards satisfying the demand of France growing out of the Chadouine incident.

Sir William subsequently reached this city, where his condition became such that it was deemed inexpedient for him to continue his journey. He became rapidly worse, and though the best medical aid was summoned to assist him, he lost strength rapidly, and to-day the end came.

Sir William was a son of the late Arthur White, Esq. He was born in 1824, he entered the diplomatic service in 1857, his first appointment being as clerk to the British consulate general at Warsaw. During the war between France and Germany in 1870-71, Sir William represented French interests at Dantzie, while British consult there. In 1885 he conducted in a most able manner the conferences called to settle the difficulty between Servia and Bulgaria.

the reception turned out a dead failure.
The ministers were hissed as they passed through the streets, and had great difficulty in obtaining a hearing.
